“ My mother was as much a good friend and confidant as she was mom. She was always there to listen to my secrets good and bad without judgement with humor and grace. She was there for me when we lost Michelle, which was the worse things I've ever lived through. On a lighter note, whoever has the picture of her roller skating as an adult at grandma and grandpa's back yard, I would really like a copy of that, please. Mom, I love you and miss you and I know you're rocking Michelle in your arms. See you later!!

“ MYRTLE STREET

For awhile, and now forever more - Myrtle Street will never be the same again. Jane is gone. For decades, all who love Jane have always known where to find her. Except for an occasional errand or stop at Kmart, Jane has always been at home on Myrtle Street.

Tending to dogs, fish, baby bunnies, cats, children - who are all grown, grandchildren - who are adults too! Herald, her mom, watching out for neighbors and the neighborhood. We've always known, day or night, we could stop by or call Jane. Such a secure feeling. Knowing she was always there. Busy, but never too busy. We'll miss that sooooo much.

Such a character - "Oh Gawd" and the rolling of her dark, root beer brown eyes.

Honest and to the point, but never hateful. Such a fine balance, few ever achieve.

Savy - nothing got by Jane.

Amazing listener. Keep of all confidences.

Salt of the earth - you could talk to her about anything.

I'm so proud of the person she was. Soooooo proud she is my aunt.

We love you, Auntie Jane!!!!!!
